Background

For successful nuclear decommissioning in the UK, the appropriate application of technology is essential. Suitable selection at the early decision making stages can help to reduce the risks, improve cost-effectiveness and increase the opportunities for beneficial reuse of extracted materials. Innovation can support these objectives at all stages of project planning, design, site operation and validation. The benefits of this can be applied to the workforce, contractors, clients, stakeholder community and to the UK economy as a whole.

This SAFESPUR event focuses on a range of innovations at varying stages of the decommissioning life-cycle. The speakers will bring you up to date with the latest developments and research projects.

During the afternoon there will be a soapbox session, allowing SAFESPUR members to exchange information about innovative approaches to decommissioning that they have used or know about.

Why you should attend

By attending you will:

- learn about innovative approaches to apply in decommissioning projects
- understand what future research is planned in this area, and over what timescale
- gain the opportunity to participate in the soapbox sessions to update SAFESPUR members on a new technology within your organisation
- discuss the potential and actual challenges to implementing new technology in decommissioning.

A note summarising discussions at the event will be produced, alongside the presentations. This is available for SAFESPUR members only. This will enable SAFESPUR to forward messages from the workshop to relevant decision-makers and enable you to distribute the information to colleagues.
